A NEW ART FAIR MODEL FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

MIA INAUGURATES AN INTRIGUING AND UNIQUE NEW MODEL THIS YEAR COMBINING A HIGHLY SELECTIVE ART FAIR WITH A STRONG, CENTRAL CURATORIAL VISION, ALONG WITH INDEPENDENTLY CURATED PROJECTS.

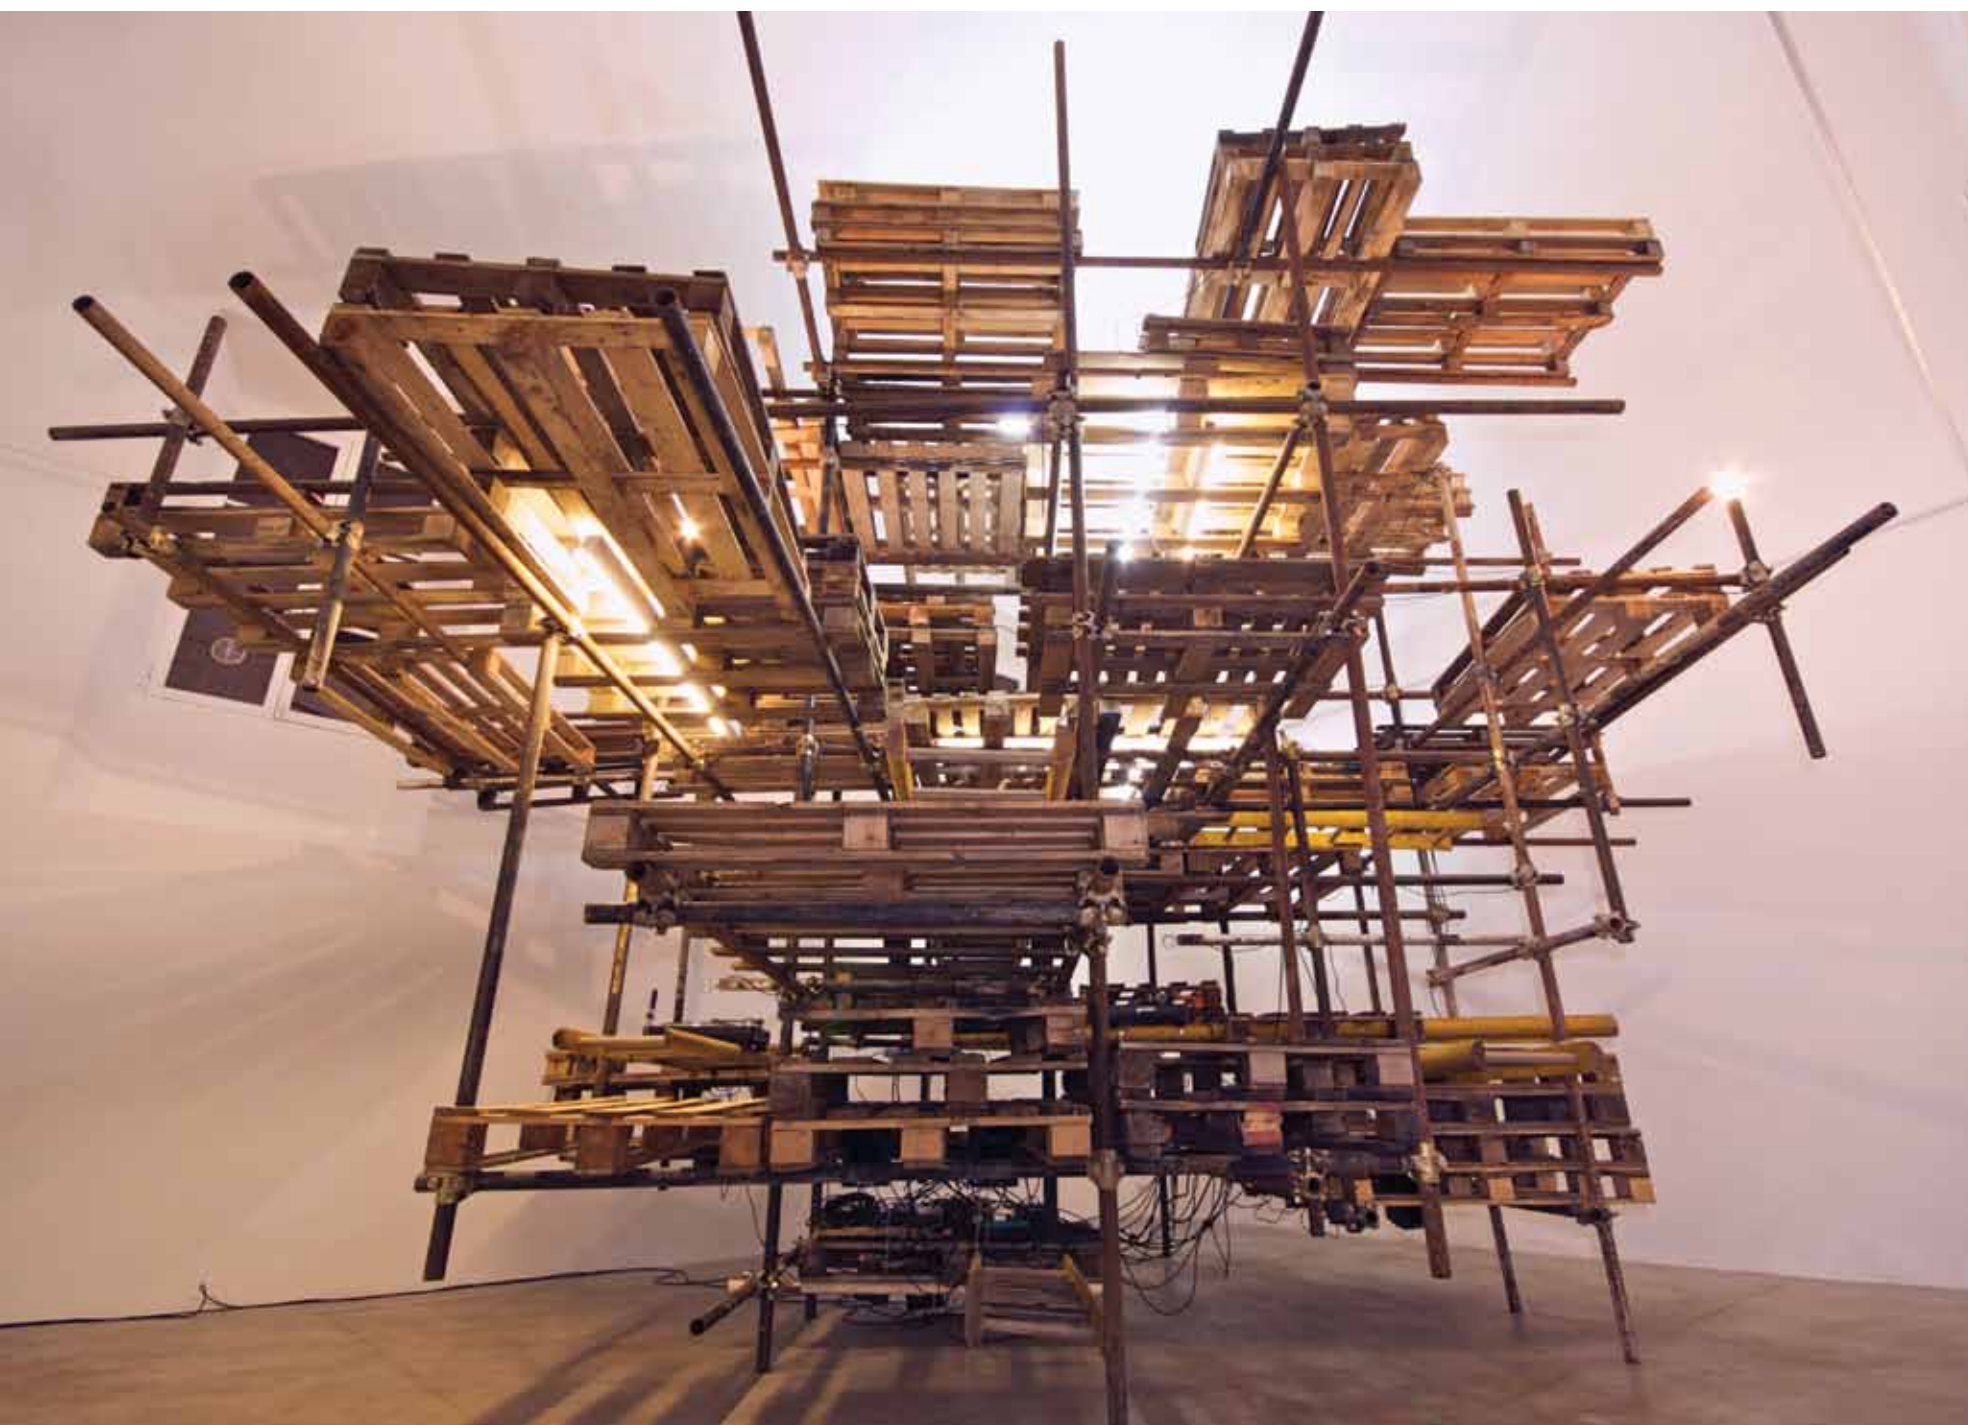

MIA 2011 is inaugurating a unique new model for the Miami art community, combining carefully selected contemporary and cutting edge galleries with a strong curatorial program aimed at supporting the Miami art community.

The fair will host 65 prestigious international dealers, exhibiting contemporary art, including photography, works on paper, sculpture, installations, art project rooms, and new media from emerging and established artists. "My commitment to the Miami International Art Fair - MIA will be the application of my many years of experience in order to make MIA a unique, contemporary platform for the world of collecting and exhibiting art," said Aldo Castillo. Other special exhibitions at MIA will include "Lotus in Motion", by conceptual artist Gordon Halloran. "Lotus in Motion" is a series of floating paintings that represent in a simple and abstract form, the lily pad of a lotus flower. Each floating painting will be uniquely formed and painted to work in harmony as they are set afloat in an ever changing montage of overlapping color and transparency assisted by audience activated movement. Additionally MIA will present a specially commissioned wall of floating steel curtains by Colombia's Claudia Hakim, a renowned fiber artist currently working on creating art from automobile parts. In addition, MIA will gather important women within the international art industry, including Brazil's Maria Bonomi, South Africa's Lorna Marsh and Korea's Hyung Joo Kim.

MIA Presents "IMPROVISING ARCHITECTURES" a curated exhibition by Gean Moreno.

"I'm excited to participate in a fair that is so invested in the City. And, we can even say that it is invested in the right way - by juxtaposing Miami artists and dealers with their international counterparts in order to engage in broader dialogues. The main goal for Miami's present cultural development should be to draw links with the outside," Gean Moreno said. His curated exhibition "Improvising Architectures" will look at the meaning of proliferating precarious structures in our globalized world. It will showcase the work of five Miami artists--Christy Gast, Adler Guerrier, Nicolas Lobo, Ernesto Oroza and Viking Funeral--along side that of artists Graham Hudson of London, Felipe Arturo de Bogotá, and Heather Rowe and Carlos Sandoval de León, of New York.

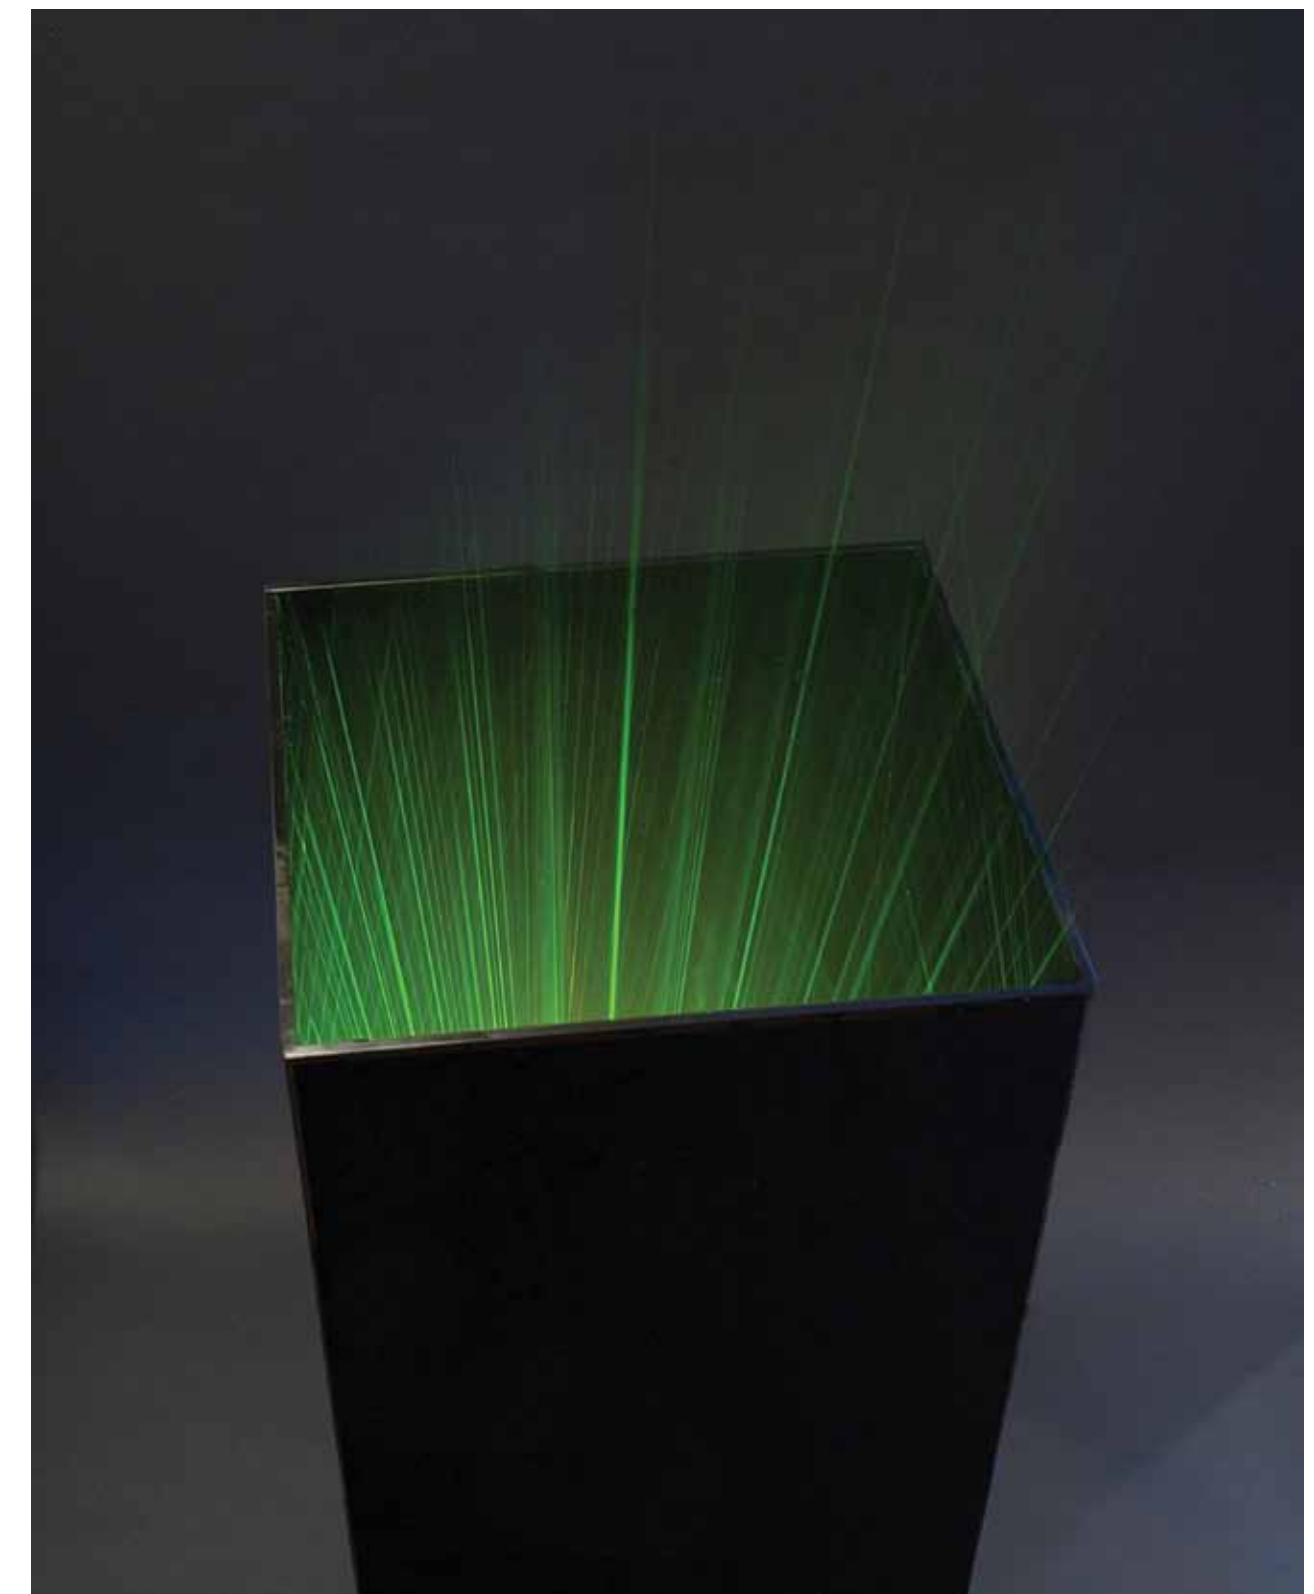

Graham Hudson, The Ruins, 2009. Steel, timber, lighting, turntables and LPs. 18m x 7m x 4m

The result of two weeks accumulation of industrial materials and stratification result in this large fragile installation made of scaffold, pallets, ladders, strip-lights and a series of turntables that flash into life for one second at a time, creating a new and ever changing score. The work is a fusion of architecture and theatre, equally a sculpture and a sound work, a bridge between the landscape of the environment and that of the psyche.

Hyung Joo Kim, Harmony of the Vestiges, Korean paper from Mulberry, Ink stick and Oriental Dyes. 82" x 47" (210cm x 119.38cm)

This piece was inspired by my son. We enter the world as pure beings. Neither our hearts nor our minds are filled with malevolent thoughts. As we age, we become tainted, and in death, we are no longer the pure white beings we once were. However, all hope is not lost. While we gain experience with age and become more exposed to the world, we can still hold on to the purity we had since birth. By holding on to the innocence, we can leave the world as we had started.
